1. Reading a confusion matrix

A confusion matrix counts predictions against the observed categories.

The diagonal counts correct classifications.

2. Preparing numerical features

Before comparing distances, check whether input features use different units.

A feature with a much larger range can dominate a distance calculation.

3. Supervised learning

Supervised learning trains a model on examples paired with known target labels.

The model learns to predict a target for previously unseen inputs.